GARDEN COSY CORNERS. The New Passion for Horticulture

Has Taken on Many Forms.

That we have only touched the outer edge of the garden craze is what the florists and plant importers and landscape architects have agreed; and the fad and demand this spring is for an acre or two that will develop with the greatest rapidity and is habitable as a garden can be. The popular requirement is for the massing of bright, vivide colors in the flowering plants, for Japanese corners, colonial alleys, eighteenth century grottoes and rookscape architects have agreed; and the

Such a garden develops with a rapidity that satisfies even the impatient American mind, and among its manifold charms is to be considered the inducement that it is not a very expensive luxury, that it is picturesque and easily laid out: that a flower and veryise loving woman alone can take of a garden devoted exclusively to pose culture; and in a rose tract there is sure these days to be a domed tea arbor of green wire, shaped like a temple dedicated to the muses and large enough to give the climbing plants a chance to display their glories of blossom to the greatest advantage.
